Half way through the intro of the song then I just started playing without even realizing it, the next thing I knew I was half way through the song and I had barely even realized that i was playing.

This was the moment that I realized that I wanted to do something with music and later that day I had started expanding upon a few small riffs that I had written down on a piece of notepaper a few weeks earlier.

Over the past few months I had been learning guitar just to pick it up as a hobby and have something to do in my spare time. Since a young age I have always been a fan of music and pretty early on my dad had gotten me hooked on classic rock, especially ones with heavy guitar. I had always been fascinated by just how effortlessly they glide across the fretboard making these incredible solos and heavy pieces of music and after seeing some of them live i went out the next day and bought a guitar.

A few weeks after I started making music I started picking up bass and drums to try and make what I was creating feel wohler. Bass was really easy to pick up because it was really just highlighting the key notes of what the guitar was playing. Drum was a bit harder because of it being an entirely different play style, instead of just moving my wrist and fingers it was a whole body movement and a lot more exuating.

At some point in the future I hope to find some people with a similar creative mindset as me and a similar taste in music to try and make the creation process a bit easier and maybe even more enjoyable.

Though I'd love to go into a career with music I don't think I will, I'd like to have a steady job but if the opportunity ever presents itself I'd take it in a heartbeat.
