I never appreciated how good a salon is at cutting hair until a bunch of teenage hockey players with dull razors gave me a haircut. So last year for hockey we got really bad haircuts, like really bad and we had to go to school at least one day without covering it up with a hat or shaving it all off unless we would have to do it again next year but after my one day I shaved it all off so it would grow back even and i was just kind of bald ,cold ,and goofy looking and the worst part about it is that I broke my wrist 2 weeks later so I kind of did it all for nothing.

However, if I could go back in time and change it I wouldn't because it made me realize what is important in life. Before I was so preoccupied with my physical appearance that I didn't realize how miniscule and unimportant it was and the thing that really matters is how you treat people. Since then I have not felt insecure about myself because I know how much worse it can get.

The school sees it as a lot worse than it is. I wouldn't even consider it hazing because it was all consensual but we still had to do it as a secret because the athletic director isn't too keen on it but if anything it is a learning experience”.
